PHOTOGRAPHING A RACCOON.

(Chicago News.) "I was tramping through the woods looking for stray snapshots when I came across a beach tree that I had noticed several times before," says a writer. 'I had been interested in this tree on account of some suspiciouslooking scratches on the bark and a large hole in the trunk some thirty feet from the ground, giving it very much the appearance of being the snug retreat of some animal. Having my climbers with me, I ascended the tree. To my gratification and delight the cavity contained a raccoon. But how was he to be photographed? The only large tree that stood near the beech was a maple, and if I could induce him to leave his retreat he probably would sit long enough on one or the other of the trees for me to make an exposure. After some rather vigorous prodding on my part the coon showed himself and ran from the beech into the maple at once, finally seating himself on a large dead limb, and looking York, acros at me with a decidedly vexed ex-

There was, however, a fraudulent is sue of government bonds nearly 100 years ago in which a trusted clerk was the culprit, and the loans known as the deferred 6 per cents of 1790 and the 8 per cent loan of 1798 were involved. The certificates or bonds were issued by the register of the treasury, then Joseph Nourse, and Charles Tompkins was a clerk under him from 1790 to 1802, having charge of the books of blank cenand loan offices and scrip certificates given on which stock was issued. The whole amount was taken and the stock issued in 1799. The length of this loan was fifteen years, but nearly the whole of this and a like loan of $1,481,000 made in 1800 was taken up in ten years.

The Discovery.

Tompkins left the government service in 1802, and in 1806 it was discovered that there had been an over-issue in the $5,000,000 loan of $1,000. On investigation it was found that ten certificates had been taken and the abstract alorder for the stock which he issued and obtained from Mr. Biddle $1,055 including the premium.
